La Niña has arrived, weathermen declare

By Joseph J. Allen

Weathermen in the United States and elsewhere are predicting a La Niña event, which means that the weather will be cooler and drier than normal.

The La Niña phenomenon is the opposite of El Niño, which is a warming of the Pacific Ocean.

La Niña is caused by a combination of factors, including a strong trade wind that pushes water toward the west coast of South America.

When this happens, the water warms up and the weather becomes warmer and wetter.

La Niña is expected to last for several months, but it could last longer.

Weathermen are predicting that the La Niña event will be similar to the one in 1997-98.

During that time, the United States experienced a severe drought in the southwest.
